FEBRUARY, 1959

EMPLOYMENT, UNEMPLOYMENT AND UNDEREMPLOYMENT SAMPLE SURVEY: HOW IT IS TO BE CONDUCTED

THOUGH it is common knowledge that there is a good deal of unemployment and underemployment in the Island, the dimension and the distribution of this malady—which is not only an economic but also a grave social evil, are not known. Unemployment is really a limiting case of underemployment, where a person available and willing to work is unable to find work for a period, may be a day or a whole week. We could in fact think in terms of employment alone—of a range from full employment to many, various degrees and forms of underemployment to many others and unemployment to the few.

2. More information at depth and precise estimates of both the dimension and the distribution of underemployment among the different geographical regions, sectors of economy and other population classes, are required before efficient and well-balanced plans for creating more employment could be evolved. It is often forgotten that manpower is a factor of production and an important resource—in fact, the most important resource of most of the Asian countries in this region. A survey on a sufficient scale can supply the necessary inventory—the location, equipment and potentialities of this factor, how far this important resource is unutilised, and can lead to balanced programmes for suitable re-orientation and increased utilization of the resource—programmes that may at least make up partially for lack of capital.

3. Close estimation of facts through a survey of this nature is again essential for proper evaluation of the development programmes that will be put through. A re-survey, maybe on a smaller scale tagged on to another survey or census but covering the general population, done say 3, 5 or 8 years hence, can then furnish a satisfactory measure of the progress made in the meantime. A partial survey is not often a correct indicator of the impact of development programmes; because such programmes may have benefited certain economic sectors and certain population classes only, sometimes at the cost of others. Even where the impact of some specific programmes within limited spheres is to be assessed, a general survey of this nature is desirable as partial measures may fail to catch the improvement (or deterioration) brought about in secondary or other subsidiary spheres, one or more removed from the original.

4. On similar consideration, the Government decided to have a comprehensive Employment, Unemployment and Underemployment

Survey of the Island. The International Labour Office provided an Expert to advise and assist in the Survey. With the co-operation of the Department of Census and Statistics, the Survey has now been organised by the Department of Labour, and the actual field work started in February. A set of Survey Schedules were drafted and discussed locally between Departments and individuals interested; comments and suggestions of experts and Institutions abroad specialising in the line, were also obtained. The pre-test of the draft Schedules was simultaneously started in September, 1958, in ten villages scattered all over the Island by ten selected Labour Officers; further pre-test of the draft Schedule was also done by a batch of advanced University students in areas near the University and then by six Statistical Investigators. In the light of the pre-test experience and the comments and suggestions received, the draft Schedules were improved. A team of 62 Statistical Investigators will collect the survey information in the finalised schedules; the Statistical Investigators have been trained both through exhaustive classroom instructions and trial field work during the past few weeks. Information will be collected by the Statistical Investigators by interviewing the heads of the sample households (assisted by other concerned members of the household). The whole geographical area of the Island is divided into 36 rural and 20 Urban strata of nearly equal population units (some of them combined), for purposes of the Survey, on consideration of geographical features, cultivation and broad nature of occupations. The supervision of field work is to be done by the 19 District Statistical Officers and 16 selected Labour Officers who have also been given on brief training.

5. The Employment, Unemployment and Underemployment Sample Survey (EUUSS) 1959 is to spread through one full year; the Survey needs to spread over the year as underemployment has often marked seasonality features. The Survey is on sampling basis; that is, not all the villages or urban census blocks will be surveyed—nor all the household in the villages or urban blocks selected on probability basis—but only those that happen to be selected under the blind mathematical sampling scheme. Only 8 sample households will thus be selected in each sample village for detailed investigation, and one-tenth of the total households in a sample urban block. The information, as usual, will of course be kept confidential, so that no householder can be identified in the final results published. It is worthwhile mentioning here that sample surveys, apart from being economical in the long run, have been found to yield more accurate results in many cases than a general census; the reason is, the smaller scale of operation permits more intensified training and control, and more careful enquiry.

6. The sample villages and urban blocks have been selected, roughly one sample village per 7,000 population in the rural strata and one urban block per 3,500 population in the urban strata. A sub-sample of households will be visited once in each quarter to study the seasonal and other fluctuations. Information in the different Schedules is collected on land holding and use at the village level, the principal sources of income of all the households in a sample village/block; household composition and particulars, including main and secondary activities of the individual, household land holding and use, particulars of individual household enterprises; industry classification, occupation classification of individuals, distance to work-site, number of days worked during the past 30 days and the number of hours worked during the week, hours available and migration particulars of individuals; household domestic expenditure and enterprises' account, sickness and deaths to household members during the past one year. The number of items of information collected are many, but real understanding of the employment position cannot be secured without the essential subsidiary information covered.

7. Just a few direct questions as to whether persons are with or without jobs, and the hours worked, may do for western organised economies, but are not adequate for the less developed economies. Measurement of unemployment and underemployment is much more difficult in the less developed economies where a job is not standardised or defined; the same piece of land provides jobs to 3 or 5 persons accordingly as there are 3 or 5 brothers in the household. Work is spread over-time in household enterprises, and the hours worked include much of idle and waiting time. The lower form of organisation and technological level prevent optimum utilisation of the time worked. A job has little definite meaning in this situation outside the organised sector of the economy, and the hours worked fail to measure the content of work. There is often no tradition of actively looking for work. The situation can therefore be assessed satisfactorily only by approaching it from a number of angles through specialised surveys. Income is acknowledged to be an important indicator of the content of work in such situation; but reporting of incomes is notoriously defective, and to estimate income the expenditure approach is simultaneously adopted. It will now be realised that a complex large-scale Survey is unavoidable to measure employment and underemployment in less developed economies.

8. The necessity of general survey of employment and underemployment for the Island, giving precise estimates and detailed information on related factors has been acknowledged by the administration, planners and social scientists in the past; a big and complex task has now been taken in hand. The main Survey is expected to furnish estimates within small margins of sampling error (about 5 per cent level for a few all-Island overall items) as also workable breakdowns for the different major sectors (urban and rural), and industrial occupational divisions (estate agriculture, other agriculture, services, distribution and others). The information will be available by sex, age, education (including specialised skills) household industry and other important individual characteristics. Attitude on availability (within village or outside local areas), preferences and expectations will be collected. There is also provision for small-scale Pilot Studies at depth to explore further the meaning of the matter reported, where necessary. When completed the Survey will be unique in so many ways for this part of the world. The co-operation of individuals, households and establishments is solicited to make the venture a complete success.

- (2) that in respect of work done on a Sunday that worker shall be paid as remuneration the minimum rate of wages for a normal working day increased by—
 - (a) 50 per cent. of such minimum rate for the first 9-hours (inclusive of one hour for a meal) ; and

- (b) 100 per cent. of the minimum hourly rate (ascertained by dividing the daily minimum time rate by 8) for each subsequent hour of work.

The preceding provisions of this paragraph shall not apply to—

- (a) watchers ; and
- (b) workers engaged on work outside the business premises of the employer for periods exceeding 12 days, in respect of duration of each such period.

Annual Holidays (Section 25)

1. If a worker has been in continuous employment and has worked under the same employer for more than 232 days in any year (hereinafter called the "qualifying year"), he shall be allowed in the next succeeding year a holiday or holidays, calculated at the rate of one holiday for each unit of 4 days by which the number of days on which the worker has worked exceeds 232 :

Provided, however, that it shall not be obligatory on an employer to allow any such holiday in respect of any period of work in excess of 288 days.

In this paragraph "days on which a worker has worked" includes—

- (a) every holiday allowed by the employer to the worker under section 25, at any earlier time in any year under consideration ;
- (b) every day of absence on any grounds approved by the employer ;
- (c) every day of absence due to any injury to the worker caused by an accident arising out of and in the course of his employment ;
- (d) every day of absence due to any occupational disease specified in Schedule III of the Workmen's Compensation Ordinance (Cap. 117) ;
- (e) every day on which the employer fails to provide work for the worker ; and
- (f) every day of absence due to a strike or lockout that is not illegal and that does not continue for more than 30 days ;

but shall not include the day fixed as the weekly holiday under section 24.

2. (i) If the number of holidays that a worker is entitled to does not exceed seven, such worker shall be allowed, and he shall take, those holidays on consecutive days.

(ii) If the number of holidays that a worker is entitled to exceeds seven, such worker shall be allowed, and he shall take, seven of those holidays on consecutive days.

3. Subject to the provisions of paragraph 2, a worker shall be allowed his holiday or holidays on a day or days to be mutually agreed upon between him and his employer.

4. Where a worker leaves of his own accord or is discontinued or dismissed from employment, he shall, at the time of such leaving, discontinuance or dismissal, be paid one day's wage for each holiday to which he was entitled at the date of such leaving, discontinuance or dismissal.

5. The remuneration for each holiday shall be the average daily wage of the worker obtained by dividing the total wage (excluding overtime and bonuses) earned by the worker for the days on which he has actually worked in the last 60 days of the qualifying year by the number of such days.

6. The remuneration due to a worker in respect of his holiday or holidays shall be paid to him before such holiday or holidays but not earlier than seven days before such holiday or holidays.

7. In these paragraphs, "year" means a continuous period of twelve months.

8. The forgoing decisions shall not apply in respect of employment at any time more than 12 months prior to the date on which the decisions come into force.
