A Tamil Pastoral Drama:

PARALAI VINAYAGAR PALLU.

- BY SINNATHAMBY PULAVAR.

UNIQUE SPECIMEN OF DRAMATIC POESY.

(BY V. COOMARASWAMY B. A. PROCTOR.)

THE Poem opens with an Introductory part wherein the author invokes the aid of his favourite deity for the completion of the poem without hitch or bindrance. The introductory verses fall into two subheads, viz: the Introductory part known as ***iu'q and the Adoratory portion known Both Sinnathamby Pulavar and Sinnak-kutty Pulavar have Kappu (""" for Vinayagar and Suppramaniar but while Sinnatamby Pulavar is content with adoratory verses in praise of Vinayagar, Nadesar Sivagami Ammai, Sinnakkutty Pulavar has additional verses in praise of Kathirai Andavar, Thirumal and Sarasvathi, the Goddess of Learning.

Then follows the Drama:-

Act. I. The first quarter of the Hindu year roughly corresponding to the Q = SH is some of Tamil Classical Literature is the season to which the first Act is assigned and the scenes are laid in the Pallacheri (or the residential quarter of the Tillers) of the village of Chulipuram.

The Paddy grains of the previous harvest had been stored in the barn of the Paralai Temple. The parching heat of March had been followed by the monsonish rains at the end of the Hindu month of Chiththirai. The gentle South-West breeze (2000) wafts coolness and comfort across the arid fields belonging to the Paralai Temple and the Pallacheri adjoining the fields.

Just now there is little to do in the paddy fields except perhaps the patching up of a dam here and there and levelling the ups and downs wrought by the recent rains or the occasional watering of the vegetable garden. An ennui of indolent leisure has set upon our poet's Palla, the chief tiller of the farm.

Palla, the chief tiller of the farm.

To relieve the monotony of his weariness he resorts to the beverage of the season, the inebriating nectar of the palmyrah palm, which, by the way, is said to have been a gift by Lord Siva to his devotee Ravana for the enjoyment of his race, in lien of the Kalpaka tree yielding to the gods all that they desired, and in compensation for the Ambrosia from a share of which the Asuras and Rakshas had been cheated out. Frequent and copious draughts of the inebriating nectar fortify the Palla against the reproaching day and returning late at night and our laid day and returning late at night and our palla assuming a defiant attitude claims for himself a sort of laissez-aller, an ancestrained freedom to go anywhere or do whatever he liked and to return home on any day or hour he pleased, so long as thore was no work in Pillayar's fields. This extra vagant demand of the Palla for a curie blanche vagant demand of the Palla for a curie vagant demand of the Palla for a curie blanche vagant demand of the Palla for a cu quent separation from her for some length of time. At first Palli No. 1. hailed this as a welcome relief for herself, but as days passed on and signs of an animis recurrendi on the part of the Palla,—which she fondly hoped would take place in a day or two became far remote, she began to feel the pangs of sepa-

Riding on his chariot of the gentle Southern breeze with the scorching moon aloft in the sky at sunset as his boon companion and the melodious notes of the cuckeo for his trumpet, Cupid darts forth his arrows and lot is it meet that the damsel of fragile frame should pine away stricken by the pangs of separation?

Palli No. 1. feels that, to allow the Palla to get more and more estranged from her as days pass by, might prove disastrous to her domestic happiness and with a sacred resolve to reclaim him and bring him back home as early as possible, she sets out in quest of him. She guessed rightly that he was spending his days in the Pallacheri itself in the company of Palli No. 2 and wended her way thither.

It is in this juncture that the curtain is raised for the 1st Scene of the 1st Act of the

Act I. Scene 1

Enter Palli No. 1. Enter Palli No. 2 and

In Pallu poems as well as all Tamil Dramatic compositions in general it is usual for the author himself to give a word portrait of the general appearance and guit, the apparel and ornaments etc.,  $(G_{\sigma\sigma}, \dot{x}, \dot{x}, \dot{x}, \dot{x})$  of the Dramatis Personae, giving the audience an idea of who he or she is and what his or her anticedents and station in life are.  $(\omega \sigma \sigma \sigma x)$

Thus the Poet's description of Palli No. 1 in Paralai Pallu ends with அழுமண்டலம் எனி தேரற்றி ஒனே and her own introduction from the stage is அழுமண்டலம் அதிற் பள்ளிகானே. Similarly for Palli No. 2 the stanzas end with சேரழ மண்டலம் பள்ளிகானே.

one consort from the place of domicile and the other from the ancestral home are appropriate in the case of the Tiller of the fields of Paralai Vinayagar, overlord of both these regions.

But in the case of Kanagarayan it is otherwise. He cannot claim lordship or authority over all the regions of South India and Ceylon. As a human being his sphere of influence and authority is limited and circumscribed. His original home is Karaikkadu near Conjeevaram. When the Karaikkadu clan migrated Southwards and thence to Jaffina and made wards and thence to Jaffina and made colonies in Karaikkal, Karaikkudi etc. in South India and various villages in Jaffina, these Southern regions in which the Karaikkaddar settled came to be known as Thenkarai and to distinguish from these, the original abode of the clan was thence forward known as Vadakarai This accounts for the departure of Sinnakkutty Pulavar from model as regards nomenclature of the Pallis and calling them Vada-Karai Palli and

Now to return to our subject. One observation I may make before proceeding further—the conditions of life among the labouring classes in the rural parts of Jaffna as they exist today are not far different from those which we find portrayed in the two Pallu poems of 150 years ago, except for the progressive development by which the Status relations of the Social structure are being replaced by contractual relations. The fewdalistic ties of vassal and landlord are fast snapping under the surge of the rapidly advancing and unstemmable tied of democracy.

Passing now to the characters that appear on the stage in Pallu Nadagams, the portraiture of the three characters, the Palla and his two consorts, by the two poets, S. K. Pulavar and S. T. Pulavar is so closely similar that the picture formed in the mind's eye is that of three sets of "Twins".

Both the Pallis No. 1. are of the Blonde type, well built, with bright eyes and auburn hair twisted into a knot. Sinnathamby Pulavar leaves his Palli unadorned and plain except for a pearl necklace. But Sinnak-kuddi Pulavar's Moothapalli is as much embellished as his verses. She wears a Thaii (the symbol of married life'). She is dressed in a were sufficiently with fragrant wood apple flowers (***postarte****is="L") and wears the sacred ashes on her forehead. Nor is she wanting in the cosmetic arts, we says the poet.

Palli No. 2 of Kanaganayagan Pallu also

Palli No. 2 of Kanaganayagan Pallu also resembles Palli No. 2 of Paralai Pallu. Both the Pallis No. 2 are spare built, of slender waist and nimble feet treading measured steps like unto a swan or the elephant, of narrow forehead and artistic conflure the knitted hair (Asimos) streaming down the there appeared the Palli of Thenkarai, making all wonder whether that was a swan or a feminine form that glided along so gently. Sinnathamby Pulavar's Pallis reflect their respective mental attitude and outlook in life by way of contrast in their self-introduction to the stage audience. Palli No. I introduces herself as the vassal attached to the farms of Pillayar one of whose exploits was the transcribing of the immortal Epic of the Mahabharatha on the golden peaks of Mount Meru. This to her mind is a grand exploit worthy of serious mention and lavish praise. But the Eliapalli strikes a lighter vein. Pillayar is said to have once upon a time, assuming the form of a crow perched upon the lid of Rishi Agasthiya's Vase containing Ganges water and made the Vase tumble over and released the imprisoned water which them flowed down to the sea as the mighty Cauveri River. The Rishi was vexed at the loss of his holy water when the Deity exasperated him further by assuming before his eyes the form of a little Brahmin boy. The enraged Agasthiya wanted to punish this mischielyous boy and pursued him but the mischief-monger baffled his efforts with the utmost ease. At last when the Rishi was tired out, Pillayar graciously appeared before the Rishi, in his own resplendent form, and Agasthiya now saw that he had been pursuing with intent to punish not a mischievous Brahmin boy but his Lord. He now apologised and prayed that the Lord would be pleased to restore the vase of water. Vinayagar was well pleased by the praise of his devotee and told him to refill the vase from the mighty Cauveri not less holy than the Ganges, and granted him many other boons also.

The humour of the situation created by

The humour of the situation created by the above exploit is the sort of thing that appeals to the younger Palli who takes this as the theme of her praise in her self introduction to the audience.

Passing on to the third character on the stage, the pictures of the Pallas by the two poets are also not dissimilar. Both wear a turban on the head. Holy Ashes are conspicious on the forche of each. Both have a moustache though in one case it is and in the other considered a moustache though in one case it is and in the other considered. Both have a moustache though in one case it is and in the other considered the Arrack (Output 1997), while the Paralai Palla has taken to the more refined beverage the arrack (Output 1997), while the Tellippalai Palla is soaked with toddy right up to his throat (output 1997), while the Tellippalai Palla is soaked with toddy right up to his throat (output 1997), while the comes with empty hands clapping them to the accompanyment of his own laughter, whereas the man who took arrick is able to vary two mammetties, one of which he uses as a walking stick to steady his faltering footsteps and the other mammetty he carries on one of his, shoulders.

With the description and self-introduction

With the description and self-introduction of these three characters the curtain drops on the first scene.

A SOUND MOVE.

WE CONGRATULATE THE LIBERAL LEAGUE on the success of the All-Parties' Con-ference which met last Saturday and declared in favour of Dominion status as the goal of Ceylon's political aspira-Bitter experience has taught the leaders of the people the demoralising influence of half measures. There can be no half-way house in the march for freedom. It were better to have downright autocracy than camouflaged despatient. The saries of certifications despotism. The series of certifications by the Governor has proved to the people that they are now living under a system of Government far worse than the benevolent despotism of the Gov-ernor-in-Council of by gone years. The delegates who assembled at the conference did truly reflect the views of the people of this country when they stood up as one man for Dominion status. This, in itself, is a great advance on the diffidence of an earlier concretion which always counselled to vance on the difficence of an earlier generation which always counselled to make haste slowly. As the insolence of Lord Curzon provoked the Indian more ment for freedom, Sir Hugh Ufford anti-his Commissioners have stirred up our sense of national self-

The conference was useful in other ways as well: it brought together leaders from all quarters of the Island who have bitherto pursued their work without the steadying and sustaining influence which agreement as to purposes and methods brings to workers. Each one toiled on with his band of workers in the way he and they hought best and not knowing what his fellow-workers elsewhere are doing. A central organisation of workers with objectives clearly defined and methods examined in the light of experience and in an astmosphere of co-operation cannot but prove a source of strength and inspiration to every leader. This, the conference have resolved to bring the conference have resolved to bring into being and have appointed a representative provisional committee to take steps therefor. Now that the suspicion which had lurked in many minds that the Liberal League, the National Congress and the Labour-Party were rowing independently of each were rowing independently of each other has been dissipated by the frank and thoughtful pronouncements made at the conference by the respective leaders of each of these parties, the door has been opened for these parties. has been opened for waverers, pol-troons and the faint-hearted to step in and enlist in the national cause. We have no doubt that the Provisional Committee which meets on the 28th inst. will take steps to advise the formation of a Working Committee drawn from each of the provinces or districts. Each such province or district which is represented on the Working Committee should be thoroughly organised not merely to express itself on any question but to be able to take effective steps to carry out the decisions of the Working Committee. For this purpose one cannot think of a better model than the Indian National Congress with its provincial and district organisations. Fortunately for this organisations. Fortunately for this country, we have men who are ready to offer their services and who having worked in the Congress, and suffered imprisonment could claim an intimate and inside knowledge of the working of that body.

So far as this province is concerned, the Thamil Nad Congress Committee will be only too glad, if it were necessary, to release from his duties an English educated young man whose term in jail has only enhanced his capacity for work.

It should be borne in mind that the choice of method for the realisation of self-government will depend on the perfection of the machinery the Working Committee will be called upon to fashion and breathe life and vigour into it.

Mr. E. W. Perera's motions will decide the starting point of the national work and though the nation has reason to hope for the best, it should prepare for the worst. There are certain to be obstacles in the way. Let us view them as opportunities to test our strength of will and not succumb to them in despair. Diogenes of old rolled up the street an empty barrel and did not realise that he was imped-ing the march of his security's ing the march of his country's army. He was a great patriot. Even so, Mr. G. G. Ponnampalam, Advocate, was a little too previous in airing his apprehensions and might have bottled up his ardour for a less solemn occasion. Mr. H. A. P. Sandrasegara K. C., has not spoken a bit too strongly in protesting against the hysteria which proceeded from certain quarters.

It is our duty to congratulate the delegates who went down to the conference from this province and on behalf of their countrymen pledged their co-operation and support to the All-Parties Conference.

Origin of the Name Yalppanam-

BY "AGRICOLA"

I have read with interest the contribution by Mudaliyar Rasanayagam under the above heading which appeared in your issue of the 13th.

Would the Mudaliyar kindly enlighten your readers as to whether there is any authority (except his own word for it) that "Sempahap Perumal ruled Yalppanam under the Sinhalese name Bhuveneka Vahu" Is the name Bhuvenega Bahn alias Puveneka Vahu really Sinhalese? Would he also tell us as to whether that name, if assumed while a Viceroy at Yalppanam, would not have been rejected as unsuitable to denote his position as Emperor of Ceylon when he mounted the throne at Cotta?

Would he quote a single instance in Ceylon history where a Viceroy or prince carried his old name to his new position of Emperor?

An attempt was once made to identify the Puveneka Vahu on the Kattiyam of the Kandaswamy Temple of Nellore with Sapumal Kumarera alias Sempaka Perumal merely on the coincidence that the latter subsequently at Cotta assumed the name Bhuvenega Bahu. But the Mudaliyar seems to contend that Sempahapperumal had assumed the name in Yalppanam.

Would the Mudaliyar kindly refer me to the authority for fixing the date of composition of Kailayamalai which he says was composed 130 years before that of Vaipavamalai?

The inscription at Ramnad bears no date but the date can be approximately fixed from the reference in it to Gampola, a royal seat, which according to the inscription was attacked and subdued. Turnour places the date of Gampola Royalty between 1300—1350 Ad.

Some Hindu Customs.

Dr. S. C. Paul, M. D., F. R. C. S., says in the "Harbinger of Health":—

When now people spend large sums of money in obtaining artificially propared articles containing the various vitamins, both in India and Ceylon natural foods supplied all the necessary vitamins without further cost. Rice was eaten with the red pericarp containing vitamin B. Green leaves entered largely into the dietary giving a good yield of vitamin A and D. Fruits, both green and ripe were used supplying Vitamins A and C. Nuts, and germinating seeds of Palmyrah and Coconut were used giving Vitamins A. D. and E. Fresh toddy containing less than 2% of alcohol but full of young developing yeast cells whose bodies are rich in vitamins A and D were largely consumed by the working classes.

A and D were largely consumed by the working classes.

The habit of chewing betel with chunam and arecanut was another form in which vitamins were taken. The green leaf of betel has Vitamin A and D and the chunam supplies calcium necessary for the growth of bone in association with Vitamin D. But now the habit has been greatly abused. The chew of Betel was indulged in, only after mid-day meal. But now it is chewed with scarcely an intermission leading to digestive disorders, and probably causing cancer of mouth and tongue. It also leads to insanitary habits of spitting round about the house.

Towards Slave Status.

Mr. L. E. Blaze in the course of a lecture entitled "Malays in Ceylon" says:

He persuaded them not to be led away by thevague idle talk about the supposed sin of communalism. All communalism was not political in its aims and purposes, and white communalism of any kind had its dangers, it had also its utility and its benefits. There was no decent reason why communalism should be the monopoly of the larger communities. If communalism was good enough for the Englishman, for the Sinhadese and for the Tamil, it was good enough for the Moor, the Burgher and the Malays, and every other definable group whose members had a common history and common tradition. When the other communities were eagerly inquiring into their history and consolidating their social and political position, he asked them not to be slack, but to do their duty by themselves and their children, not in a hostile spirit, for they were not engaged in warfare of any kind, but striving to do their best for the general progress of the country, and not in a spirit of boastfulness but with a proper pride in the story of their national hirtory and achievements and with a reasoned confidence in the possibilities of their future.

Jail for Proctor.

Mr. W. A. P. Jayatilleke, Proctor who along with six others was found guilty of unlawful assembly, house trespass and hurt to Ellen Perera and Muttu Menika was sentenced to 15 months' rigorous imprisoment by the Chief Justice at the Kandy Assize Court.

Fallen Tree Trunk Stands Up.

IN MADAKASIRA VILLAGE.

WAS IT PRAYING?

Day by day reports are confirming the rumour of a strange incident that happened at Haresamudram in Madakasira taluk about the beginning of this month. An aged "juvai" tree had fallen down in the village and the same had been auctioned by the revenue Department as a dead tree and the purchaser had cut off its branches and leaves and left the bare trunk to dry. A few days after this one fine morning when the shepherd boys were grazing their cattle near the old trunk, it suddenly raised itself making a big noise and stood erect. The boys saw this rising of the trunk and got up frightened thinking that it must be the work of some strange demon. News of this spread all over the neighbourhood and villagers came and saw the bare trunk of the old tree standing erect.

DEFECTS OF CROWN COLONY ADMINISTRATION.

The late Sir. P Arunachalam said in 1917:

But the inherent defects of a Crown Colony administration remain. It answers well enough so long as you have only to police a country, collect taxes, make roads, administer justice &c. But much more is needed if Coylon is to be a self-reliant, self-respecting unit in the British Empire. Tied as we are to the apron strings of a bureaueracy and deprived of all power and responsibility, our power and capacities are dwarfed and stunted, we live in an atmosphere of inferiority, and we can never rise to the full height to which our manhood is capable of rising. We have hypnotised oursalves into thinking that we are weak and inferior. No greater disaster can overtake a people. We must regain our self-confidence. We must feel that nothing can daunt us.

The swaddling-clothes of a Crown Colony administration are strangling us. They have begun even to disturb the equanimity of our European fellow-subjects. Engrossed each in his business, looked forward to frequent trips home and to the time when the dust of Ceylon will be shaken off their feet, they ignored the duty ever present to earlier generations of their countrymen under the inspiration and leadership of such men as George Wall, remained indifferent to their responsibilities as citizons of Ceylon, and were rather pleased to see the Ceylonese "kept in his place." But "none are safe until all are safe."

The discontent of our European friends is of good omen for the future, for we need their co operation in reforming the administration. Its continuance is inconsistent with the great traditions of England, It is in having to do things that one learns how to do them, and develops a sense of duty in regard to them. Denied the opportunity of training in governing ourselves even in the smallest matters, we are told that we are unfit for anything better than a paternal despotism. But time after time England has shown in her own history, as in her dealings with dependent peoples, her staunch faith in the healing and ennobling power of popular institutions and has found in them the only sure remedy for the ills of the body politic.

be on a probation for six months."

Mr. Rajaratnam in moving the resolution said that they had to consider seriously what was happening in the U. D. C. Their roads had not been looked after carefully and all ordinary works had been bungled. They all knew that their Inspector of Works was not able to do any engineering work but he could say that he was an honest man and he knew surveying. In the interest of the ratepayers he would move that the services of the Inspector of Works be terminated and another man be appointed with engineering qualifications.

Mr. A. M. Brodie seconded. A committee was appointed to go into the question.

But it is important to remember that food must also contain substances which cannot be assimilated and which ought to be rejected so that the evacuation of the bowels may be satisfactory. This is what is called roughage. Almost all vegetables are unassimilable and therefore form roughage. Great economy can be practised by remembering this fact. Brinjals and drum-sticks are sometimes bought for four cents or five cents which exceed the price of rice that a man eats at a meal. It is unwise to spend so much every day on roughage. The same nurpose can be served by any preparation of Palmyrah Odiyal worth one cent besides being nutritious. One or two drops of castor oil used for flavouring the curries secures the same end. It is wise to use the cheapest vegetables of the season for roughage.

Complete mastication of food is a source of Complete mastication of food is a source of great economy. An eighth of a measure of rice well masticated is at least as nutritious as twice the amount swallowed. Teeth are intended not for beauty but for chewing food and must be made the fullest use of. Another advantage of chewing is that the food remains longer in the mouth and gets mixed with more saliva which assimilates the starchy portion of it.

Food must be tasteful and varied so that it may stimulate the flow of the juices that take part in digestion. Unpalatable food leads to underfeeding and emaciation. Overflavouring of food leads to overeating which defeats its own purpose and leads to the weakening of the digestive organs.

It is wrong to eat more often than three times a day. Even in Europe three times is the rule. But the Lords in England who have no work to do but to eat and kill time eat oftener than three times. The Englishman who comes to Ceylon lives here like the English lords in order to place the Ceylonese in the caste to which they belong in England. The result is that we imitate our English masters and eat too often wasting both health and money. We ought to remember that every morsel of food that we take in excess is snatched by us from some starving man.

The use of food articles from Europe is

The use of food articles from Europe is criminal waste. A tin of barley containing one-eighth of a measare is bought for forty cents. But so much of rice is worth only two cents. A biscuit tin weighing one pound is bought for Rs. 1-25. But one pound of flour is worth only ten cents. Even rusk locally made is doubly deceptive. A pound of rusk is worth forty cents whereas the matter it contains is worth just one fourth. A man eats five pieces of rusk and is satisfied. This weighs only one tenth of a pound and is only as nutritious as one twentieth of a measure of rice. So the man eats only one fourth of his usual meal and deceives himself with the thought that he has eaten enough. It is claimed for such foods as biscuits and rusk that they are available at all times, during travels or an unable at all times, during travels or an un-expected visit of a stranger. But we have our own preparations that keep for months together and are mere palatable and nutri-

The Malayan Urumparay Union, K'Lumpur. -:0:-

Mr. M. Selvadurai, Secretary of the U has forwarded the following letter addre-to their countrymen in Ceylon publication: of the Union

Publication:

Three years ago we addressed almost all of you in Ceylon on the subject of the formation of a Geylon Urumparay Union to cooperate with the Malayan Urumparay! Union for promoting the general well-being of the inhabitants of our mother village. No serious effort having been made by you to organise yourselves into a society, we venture to address you again on the same subject.

- subject.

  2. A perusal of the Twelfth Annual Report of the Malayan Urumparay Union—a copy of which was sent to you at the beginning of the year—will disclose the fact that we have been during the past 13 years, making a constant offort to improve the conditions of our village: what we have so far succeeded in doing is practically nothing, and what remains to be done or achieved is no doubt very great indeed. It is our firm conviction that no real and lasting progress can ever be made by our village unless the intelligentsia realise the value and importance of team-spirit and work together for the common good of the people. It is becoming increasingly difficult for a man to live unto himself or by himself. No man can fail to observe the present day political, social and economic inter-dependence of communities and nations.

  3. If you and we pull together we can
- communities and nations.

  3. If you and we pull together we can surely do a lot to place our motherland in the front rank of the most progressive villages of Jafina. If we neglect our duty to our own village who else can be expected to do it for us? Salvation must come from within, and not from without. The power to make our village great or prosperous lies in us. Success depends mainly on the right methods of exercising that power. Pulling together is one of the safest methods and this will ultimately lead us to victory.
- and this will ultimately lead us to victory.

  4. According to the census taken by the Union there are now in Ceylon not less than 95 English educated people of our village employed in different parts of the Island. A good number of them are, of course, found in Colombo and a few other important centres. Scattered far and wide as they are, it is not impossible to organise them all into a Society with Colombo as its headquarters. Our members are found all over British Malaya which is more than twice as big as Ceylon.
- 5. It is to be sincerely hoped that you will carefully and seriously consider our proposal, and, without loss of time, take the necessary steps to organise yourselves into a strong and powerful body. No prophets are needed to forestell that a Caylon Urumparay Union, well organised and ably managed will be an immense tower of strength to Urumparay and a justifiable pride to all concerned.

It has been said that we should take fruits every day. The cheapest fruit is the plan-tain especially of the Kathali kind. It is far more wholesome than the Kappal which costs three times. I believe it is fashion costs three times. I believe it is fashion that blinds people to the value of the 'Kathali' fruit. Tomatoes and pine-apples can be used in the seasons when they are available. The Thamil medical works give the highest praise among fruits to the woodapple and to nelli fruit.

ship at Toronto University in Canada, Lord Irwin delivers himself of Gandhiji thus:—

"Partly, however, through temperament, and often perhaps through circumstance, Mr. Gandhi has repeatedly, disappointed many of his warmest friends by his failure hitherto to evolve, and win support for, a considered and constructive policy. Here is one of the major tragedies of the Indian situation. So long as the Indian National Congress is satisfied with the assertion of its own claims, and is unwilling to make the whole-hearted attempt by compromise or by abatement to meet the indefeasible claims of others, there is little hope of agreement either with Great Britain, or with the moderate elements of Hindu thought that are outside the Congress and anxious to bring the work of the Round Table Conference to practical result, or with the Indian States. Yet, quite apart from the adjustment of relations with Great Britain, an Indian nation state would be no more than a hollow phrase unless founded upon unity between communities and an identity of purpose shared by British India and the Indian States.

"Judged by this test, Mr. Gandhi's influence and action fail at critical points of the circle of Indian political opinion. And when he talks of independence for India, although he may mean something very different from what the words to Britishers would commonly imply, his words repel the minorities as well as the vast number of all creeds outside the Congress party, and excite the resentment of the Princes, who have given repeated proof in word and deed of their loyalty to the Crown of Britain" UNBLUSHING PROPAGANDA!

Parrots Celebrate Marriage.

Amidst the crushing seriousness of life Amdst the crushing scriousness of life these days come the pleasant news of the marriage of parrots from Aligarh, says the "Rangoon Mail". Some people appear to hit upon the novel idea of celebrating such a marriage. It is reported a marriage party consisting of alout 50 parrots in cages, was taken in a procession to the accompaniment of a band at the head of the procession. There was the bride-groom-parrot nutting on the marriage the procession. There was the bride-groom-parrot putting on the marriage crown. At the bride's house the party was given a hearty reception by other fellow parrots. Marriage ceremonies were gone through in the presence of hely Pundits. The next day the parrots and their owners were entertained at a sumptu-ous dinner and the owner of the Brideous dinner and the owner of the Bride-groom parrot was given a substantial

"MY PRISON EXPERIENCE".

(BY THE LATE BIFIN CHANDRA PAL)

I spent about teven months as a political risoner in British Indian juils. My first contention was upon a charge of contempt of court on this case I was given the maximum term rovided in the indian Penal Code. I have not see yet heard that in any ether instance any disoner was given the maximum sentence. It was eta months' simple imprisonment.

About the middle of 1917 when the antiartition and Boycott sglission in Bengal was using a high tide and there was a general ampaign both in the press and from the platter of the policy and character of British line in the sountry, many Nation-list Newspers commerced to be bauled up under the selfiton section of the Indian Penal Code. Most it hem refused really to put up any defence, ome indeed went so far as to refuse publicly and appear court to recognie the jurisdiction of chitain judges to try Indian pairlots. The Bande Mataram', the Nationalist English daily Calcutte, was also hauled up under what is nown as section 124 A of the Indian Penal Code, of are as I remember the charge against this apper was not based upon anything that it had self written, but upon translations of some finding Bengali articles that formed the basis of sedition case against the Editor and Printer of a senting under what is the self written, but upon translations of some finding Bengali articles that formed the basis of sedition case against the Editor and Printer of a senting under what I think it was the 'Yoganathar' SRI AUROBINDO'S ARREST.

Sj Aurobinda Ghose was arrested as the Editor of the "Bande Maiaram". Two other gentlemen connected with the paper, one as Manager and the other as Printer and Publisher, were also arrested and put on "their trial.

It so happened that in searching the "Bande Maiaram" office the police discovered a letter of mine addressed to the Editor. I was at that time the Editor of the English weekly "New India".

Bengali press.
This prompted me to write to all the leading diau editors of Calculta asking them if they swe the writer of this statement who signed mustif "Max" and was a well known figure not by in the English press of Calculta in those ye but also in the local European scolety and emercantile community and if any of them sponsible for the statement made by him,

The story of the origin of this paper is exceedingly interesting and would read like some mediseval romance in these days. We had been feeling the want of a daily organ almost from the very commencement of our Nationslist campaign of Swadeshi and Boycott. There was siready a cleavege between the older leaders and ourselver. Their prudent politics did not out our tempera ment, nor appeal to our political instinct, support a loy the study of the freedom movements in other lance. We were out for a more courageous propaganda. We believed in truth more than in diplomacy. We did not believe that the diplomacy body or serves any useful purpose. We did not believe in generosity in politics. We were convinced of it that the British rulers of the country would do that only in regard to us which was reasonably estellated to promote the commissional servers and consequently we held that as long as trees interests were not threatened there could be no change of policy in the British Government. In India.

POLITICAL MENDICANCY.

Every Indian politician more or less believed with us in these matters. But the older politician did not like to take the ricks of bringing down the usiled fit of the British power in India upon all our political activities by throwing out this cope challenge to it Mr. Asbutch On adhury (after wards Sir Ashutch) speaking as Pecaldent of the Bengal Provincial Conference at Bardwan held up the old methods of political agitation in the country to redicule by monoceterising them as political mendicancy, and alled for a new and vigorous programme of a political wards of the provincial conference of the country of the province of the country to redicule by monoceterising them as political mendicancy, and alled for a new and vigorous programme of a post of the plant agent was an appropriate to the Government for the redices of specific gricyances were condemned as fattle and, were emissibility of the people were called upon to turn their back not the Government and work out their own satisfact in themselves through to operative endeavours.
